

(Un)Fit

SAMPLE CHAPTER

PART 1 — UNFIT BUT CHOSEN

What It Means to Be “Unfit”

The Lie of “Not Enough”

Let's be honest: how many times have you looked at yourself and thought, “I don't measure up”? Maybe it was comparing yourself to the highlight reels on Instagram. Maybe it was sitting in class feeling like everyone else “got it” except you. Maybe it was standing in church thinking, “If people knew the real me, they'd never think I belong here.”

That's the lie of unfitness — the idea that unless you're flawless, you're useless. Culture trains us to polish, edit, and filter our way into acceptance. But the truth? God isn't looking for filters; He's looking for the raw, the real, the undone.

“But God said to me, ‘My grace is all you need. My power works best in weakness.’ So now I am glad to boast about my weaknesses, so that the power of Christ can work through me” (2 Corinthians 12:9 NLT).

If you've ever felt that tension — between your messy self and the highlight reel of the world — you're not alone. You're living in the gap where God's grace loves to show off. While culture tells you to hide the cracks, heaven leans toward the cracks. While the world demands a résumé, God hands you a relationship. While people prize perfection, God prizes surrender.

Weakness is not where His power stops; weakness is where His power starts.

Think of all the people God chose to write the pages of Scripture: a stuttering shepherd to confront Pharaoh, a teenage girl to carry the Messiah, a fisherman to preach to thousands, a persecutor to plant churches. God seems to have a preference for the “unfit.”

Why? Because the unfit know they’re not enough on their own — and that dependence is the open door for His power.

When you finally stop running from your flaws, you begin running into His grace. When you stop curating a fake self, you start experiencing His real strength. When you let go of your performance, you find His presence. The lie of “not enough” begins to lose its grip, and the truth of “Christ in me” begins to take root.

This isn’t an excuse to stay stuck; it’s an invitation to step out. God’s grace doesn’t just cover your weakness; it infuses it with purpose. Your scars become signposts of His healing. Your failures become classrooms for His wisdom. Your insecurities become the very places His Spirit moves through most powerfully. Every part of your life — even the parts you regret — can become raw material for His mission.

And this is freeing. You don’t have to edit yourself into being useful. You don’t have to fake strength to earn His favor. You don’t have to be flawless to be fruitful.

You just have to be available.

The more honest you are about your “unfitness,” the more space there is for His Spirit to flow. It’s not self-hatred; it’s self-awareness. It’s admitting, “I can’t do this without You,” and discovering, “I don’t have to.”

Continue Reading in (un)Fit : Click here to read the full book!